RE: How the Members of the Fix Congress Cohort Can Strengthen Congressional Modernization

Dear Chairman Kilmer, Vice Chair Timmons, and Members of the Select Committee on the Modernization of Congress:

As the Select Committee on the Modernization of Congress (ModCom) ramps up its operations in the 117th Congress, we, the undersigned, wanted to take the opportunity to reintroduce the members of the Fix Congress Cohort.

The Fix Congress Cohort is an informal network of organizations and experts that formed around a shared commitment to a more functional and effective Congress. This network includes representatives of nonprofits, think tanks, congressional experts, and academics, each with strong expertise in congressional history and operations.

Fix Congress Cohort members have engaged on a range of issues that impact Congress' capacity to solve problems at scale. Members of the Cohort possess policy expertise in the areas of technology and data, staff development and retention, building a diverse and inclusive workplace, bipartisanship, and increasing institutional efficiencies.

In the 116th Congress, members of the Cohort looked for opportunities to apply this expertise to the work of the ModCom. We look forward to continuing these efforts in this Congress, bolstering the Committee's recommendations to improve the first branch of our government. In anticipation of planned hearings, members of the Fix Congress Cohort are happy to share resources and research, provide or identify expert witnesses, and offer potential questions for consideration.

Additionally, Fix Congress Cohort members bring value as an association of organizations and individuals drawn from across the political spectrum. Like the ModCom, we have learned how to bridge partisan divides in service of shared values and a common goal: a strong legislative branch. Given the makeup of the Cohort, members can serve as a logical sounding board for the ModCom and a resource to help gauge how its policy recommendations may be received by a broad range of political actors and constituents.

In addition to the work of the Cohort members, a subset of member organizations engages in advocacy efforts aimed at building a Congress that is effective, efficient, and representative.

These efforts include generating support for modernization efforts among non-ModCom members of the House of Representatives, as well as in the Senate. In the 116th Congress, many of these groups put their support behind H. Res. 756, the Moving Our Democracy and Congressional Operations Towards Modernizing Resolution, which adopted nearly 30 of the Committee's recommendations. Other advocacy efforts by cohort members have been aimed at securing additional funding for the ModCom, as well as urging reauthorization of the Committee for the second session of the 116th Congress and the 117th Congress.

The challenges facing American communities demand a Congress capable of fulfilling its Article One responsibilities. Internally, the ModCom is leading this important effort. Achieving this goal will require a commitment from Congress to rethink and strengthen the way the institution functions.

As organizations and individuals committed to seeing a strong legislative branch, the Fix Congress Cohort members stand ready to provide information, expertise, and assistance to help the ModCom achieve its goals.

Sincerely,
